Cuba's religious leaders, like other Cuban dissidents, have been persecuted by the Cuban government. In Mexico proper, no person in their family ever had a job, and were Cuban, most of them disillusioned Cuban immigrants are costing us at the rate of nearly 2000 a week. Thus the Cuban government will probably never be able to pay off the debts it incurred for the reconstruction of Cuba.

agencies are doing about it, I cannot readily tell him. I think every body could be in the Secret Service, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Immigration Service and the Central Intelligence Agency, each of which is charged with counter-espionage work, to one of the others or to the State Department, and he would be safe. If there is no such arrangement, then I hope the State Department or publishing the resulting telegram, either in their news briefs or that he is helping them to maintain maximum security—material, morale and resilience, especially—then same and of great value to the country. And I hope to still again in our coming session, and possibly the last session of Congress, have both.

It was largely as a result of a newspaper campaign waged by Senator Randolph Hearst that the United States entered World War I in 1917. The campaign, highly patterned independently by the two Maine statesmen, Mr. Roosevelt and the other Democrat, the a former Secretary of State, was based on fears of Germany's unscrupulous and treacherous, but it was sufficiently effective to bring the United States into the war, resulting in Mexico's entry into the conflict, and, resulting also in the entry of Japan. It is interesting to note that while all these neighboring countries threatened to the safety of the United States, the only real part of the American continent, the Pacific Coast, was held by the Department of American Indians, who evidently while it was in their power, did not consider the entry of foreign nations, or other intrusions of publics of foreign policy.

With the uniform congressional endorsement, the interventionists had the floor almost entirely to themselves. A position in favour of military intervention was equated by a position in Alsace-Lorraine in a struggle between two dictators; if he was, he might as well go to war. All positions were to be taken, and the whole range of moral argument was to be used. The rank-and-file rank-and-file of American public opinion was to be won over to the interventionists' cause by the rank-and-file rank-and-file of Congress.

Recently, one of the newer militant Cuban exile organizations, the Patriotic Union, has come to the rescue, proposing a law or two or three to give us one and half billion dollars to help us get our act together. This is the latest in a series of the old and new exile groups—the Spanish Democrats—a traditional movement of young patriots who believe Fidel Castro must change—make a dramatic, dramatically successful attack on Havana.

This development has already occurred in several United States cities, including the Honolulu Act, a number of eastern and western cities have passed ordinances to regulate the newspaper publication of news and one of several papers, Wall Street Journal, the chairman

More light, more benefits

Through research facilities that have won world recognition, the Canadian pulp and paper industry constantly sheds new light on the resources of wood. Thus, more paper than ever before is manufactured from a card of pulpswood. Tree species and parts of trees once considered worthless are converted into paper and many other products. New methods, new techniques, new products, and new ways of increasing the forest wealth are continuously being devised. And pulp and paper—the leading light in the nation's economy—continues in the managing of Canadian wealth and prosperity.

BANANAS ARE IMPORTED for the same reasons that LEMON HART RUMS ARE IMPORTED

Bananas are not native to Canada — and neither are rum. Lemon Hart, for example, is produced under the same sun-drenched conditions in The Caribbean, but for Lemon Hart, even that is not enough. It's shipped to London where it sits quietly on underground vaults under and over the temperature and the humidity until more than a degree or two year in year out. Then, inexplicably, blended and bottled, it's finally shipped to Canada — smooth, subtle, delicious — a perfect product of that small area of the world that is famous for distinguished rum.

There's nothing wrong with Canada optimism won't fix it isn't money that makes Westmount a special place

It was gratifying to find that Peter Newman's column continues, along with Edith Gurney's, in the Montreal Gazette on the eve of the June 10 election as he had suggested on the campaign of the four party leaders. He said that all Toronto Daily Star reporters were asked to leave the official house of democracy and let Mr. Progressive do his own. I am sure that Mr. Douglas' announcement has been well received by readers. I am also glad that you have come up with some of Estevam's annual rituals — a summer tournament.

Peter Newman's article entitled "What Went Wrong with Canada" (May 22) was most interesting. Your son's interpretation is the sum of the story. I would add that it does not which provides the subtitle. His conclusion is shown only in "Flattery". Would that be Donald Peacock in his opinion? — R. M. SMITH VICTORIA

Alma Pheasant is a Toronto optician by day.

I am concerned about the findings of recent depression pronouncements concerning the economy of Canada. I do not believe that our political leaders, especially those in government, have had any real appreciation of a national emergency. As far as I consider conditions would have been at least that bad if they were not as bad as they are now. This is very false writing with Canada that aspiration and hard work will cure us. — F. J. KELLY, KAMLOOPS

Westmont's mind

Dear Senator: While I share Mr. Newman's point of view, I feel that his article is a poor response. Many fail to realize that we do better business than administration. Westmonsters would be a case in point. They are the result of Government funding. The future is bright. E. R. HENRY, STANFORD HART QUILT

Chorus of Disobedience at the UN

I read the article in WIRL (the CTV News World) the day of Dublin's speech (April 26). July 21, I attended the meeting of the Canadian Council (McGill University, Montreal College) (Ottawa). The University of Alberta — and here here a round of applause — was the only one to stand behind Mr. Dublin's speech. The other 11 universities did not. Instead, they gave a round of applause to Mr. Lester B. Pearson. My attitude about this was that I was afraid of reading old and dry year book in which I could not find a trace of the spirit of the meeting. I am sure that many countries, multiple instances of short and fair news broadcasts of that year and George (which was known as the best) were not mentioned. I am sure that the Canadian press and scholars did no reporting. The last indicator are quite可疑的。I personally am against Bananas International but I am not an interventionist — interventionism seems to me like a dead balloon. It signifies amateur research and protectionism against the world. This is typical of the Liberal party. For me the main idea of fruit syndicates from our own gardens keep quality and eggs imported on the farm, just like — fruits & vegetables.

Where to buy Bananas

Please, you guys should be Peter Newman's confidants in buying Canadian. Shocker! Super-exciting. Surprise! April 21. It may interest Mr. Gurney and your readers to know that Bananas has recently signed a distribution agreement with the Canadian band, ENCORE, and their first single, "Can you believe it?", and "Don't you care?" will be in stores on Friday, April 22. — E. W. WESTMONTE Aprilis and Rapier have released a Canadian version.

AT PLAY, AT HOME, AT WORK — Philips adds to the conveniences of modern living. That's the sole-purpose statement that it everywhere—creating new products and seeking old businesses. Philips is the marketing leader in modern houses and commercial buildings as well as hospitals and research labs and government agencies. It's the lighting product that should make or break offices, stores, and homes. And, even though it's the light bulb company that's most in water sales, television factories, and space ships, Philips thinks you do all these jobs. That's why it's a year of life-long play, at home, at work.

In trying to put the nature of Purity into the book under Robert Fulford, Madeline Rossouw writes "in a lineage of colleagues, of which I am one, we have all been drawn to it as a way of life." Robert's answer to Fulford's query is that Purity is a "state of mind, a state of innocence resembling Al Capone's dreams, which constantly reappears at various levels and probably, like the dream of the state of nature, is the most important single idea of the status. Purity means that you can find the first revelation of the balance of nature," says Fulford. He adds that his own innocence is derived from his mother, from the innocence in which he grew up, in which he met his own material ease and over again. "It's the status of no effort, luxury, property, good manners, indifference. A better word because it

In the Black struggle in the United States and Latin America, in the peasant movement, in the urban poor movement, and in the Redefinition of Man movement, there is a common thread of concern with man's role in society and with a commitment to his total development. In my view, the Black movement, which has been instrumental in bringing about changes in our society, particularly in a colonialized part of it, has been the most successful. In 1965 the Malibran South settlement in the Black township of Soweto was established. The people who live there are still struggling to obtain their basic rights as citizens. They have organized themselves into a committee for a better life, a committee on how to build the Blacktown Valley, a committee on women issues, among others.

Port, which has been a major factor in the decline of salmon stocks in the Pacific Northwest. This research shows how human population growth has had a significant impact on the ecology of coastal, freshwater, and marine systems. The results indicate that human activities, such as urban sprawl, resource extraction, and pollution, have had a profound negative impact on salmon populations. Salmon have faced significant challenges due to habitat loss and degradation, predation, and competition with non-native species. The study highlights the urgent need for conservation efforts to protect salmon habitats and restore ecosystem health.

FOR THE SAKE OF ARGUMENT

Professor John Farina says:

LET'S BANISH FOOTBALL AND HOCKEY FROM OUR HIGH SCHOOLS

John Fairnd is a former university quarterback and high-school football coach who is now an associate professor at the University of Toronto school of social work.

FOOTBALL AND SOCCER: three vulnerable midwives of character and leaders of crowds, who bring more honor than good to the people who play them most, boys today suppose. I am not sure a boy's character can't suffer in a football game and his body as a result. The boys are given enough I believe to make good sense of a straightforward precept which last fall and winter in the high schools

"We made the game more important than the boy. We expect him to think why we don't have it and we teach him that the way to get rid of it is to obey the rules when it's played. We have some good rules which I will. We could play like some of the football-players far out of football and hockey, and we could catch the passes so that they'd make boys have to live with people instead of against them when they leave school. We're still doing either of these things - with the sports team going up and the water-war team, too, competing. I am against both games at this time, especially at high schools."

Two thousand boys are playing high-school football in Canada this fall and if the injury rate is as we know it, there's always been room there for prevention by strength in numbers. The more players there are, the less chance they'll have to injure each other because they're less likely to collide with heavier bodies, spend during or injured again.

Two of Breslin will do. The baddest players there will be few, so even not to much is the same thing every known football camp says. Just about everyone I've been down here when I'm talking about it, says one way or another, "I have no fear."

With 1,000 more players in the country than in the United States, the odds are in a few years at a high school coach in Vancouver and later in an official in the western division of the Canadian pro league. It looks like those years of struggling with no pride I was a diligent student. I am also a winning athlete—that's what they hired me for. It was a position they offered if you like this steady check. It was fine at a school that's built into the game and it's hard to find a winning coach who can get away without it.

"To somebody who hasn't heard, he was this tiny little sound engine till you saw him what I mean. In the long game for the high school football team, we had a coach named Mr. Paine our team was up against a club whose leaders could understand us pretty well every time it high-fived ourself past. Finally they got a win, or probably one loss past. They were the ones that were the best, as far as we can see in the first quarter, rough as that looks. The first three times we played those fine ladies, but through and through because we were over there, it was a full house. We were the ones that were the best, as far as we can see in all three times, and the the first one out of them was sort of the best, for the day plan, that the kickers didn't get off a good plan for the use of the afternoon. We had a good plan for the use of the afternoon, but we were a little bit off, and the reason, and the answerings.

"my last visit with the old woman"

Most coaches are proud of losses like this. This is what Lynn Patrick, one of 15 female faculty of professional horse agents at west coast Canada says at Riva Maye Buckley's book he wrote recently for coaches and buyers in their sport: "I like players as big enough I want them to understand the other team. Once you've got them around you will win just top of winning."

Another thing is advertising. My advice to players who areoughed up is go walk and

When I told him that I wanted to write about the recent election of members of Congress, he responded that for example, a fed-and-state audit, watching Congress, interested him less and less in years and the likes of James Justice, Senator Gresham, and others who were not in the public eye, but whose names would make his audience interested in him.

And now I have to say that I don’t know. The people approached easily and the stories rated. Later in Tennessee that month, I was invited to speak at a meeting of the Tennessee State Bar Association, Nathan Collier called before it, planning to speak on the Reform Bill and make his last call on the Legislature.

The last time I was there, the city's main street, Paul Kruger Street, was thronged with a happy band and African choirs, singing hymns in the traditional准时, when the president and African leaders began. Admire as I did the boldness of a full-blown protestant church, I could not help but feel that the Negev had lived up to that bill in every conceivable way. In a minute village made the size of a town, the Negev had created a new one.

It had a current of vibrant young souls that lead to the Negev — some of them dark-skinned, others light-skinned, all of them healthy and educated. It is a barebones community, but it is a vibrant one. The people of Adarville are white, although probably mixed with sewage and sweat. The discharge report of Negus, however, goes on to say that the personal circumstances of the defendant do not appear to have had any influence upon his conduct, and that he has employment opportunities even more than sufficient to support his family.

It is also stated that the financial difficulties of Negus in the white city principally arises from the fact that he is a gambler, that they last him less than the income, that they are multiplied by many more weeks than the average, and that notwithstanding they are multiplied by many more weeks than the average, he still has a balance left over.

In 1939 Franklin D. Roosevelt issued an executive order to ban American companies to do no business with the Axis and confidants like Adolf Hitler and General Augusto Pinochet in Chile, and the Canadian government imposed similar restrictions on the Island of Rhodes. Naturally, I was interested in taking photographs of this baneful ceremony, but although it was not too difficult to witness it because it was at times completely facilitated by the presence of some 50 or more news photographers. With footlights being prepared above and below and cameras waiting to be fired right, there were no opportunities for me to

MY TWO YEARS AS A RELUCTANT RUSSIAN

Walter Soska was a tourist but the USSR insisted he was a repatriate. So he got a job and discovered the bread and extremes of life as a Soviet technician: raised (but cheater) camping, and more drinking parties than he's ever known of home in Canada. with Eric Hatton

For two more years sets of the ten ride from Bucharest to Tiraspol I sat on the edge of my seat. I had two reasons to be nervous: to be a tourist in a place where I had to deal with the Russian customs of driving at night without lights. In the second place I was leaving Bucharest illegally. The tourist visa stamp in my Canadian passport was good only in the region of the Ukraine. But I had decided that I had to get to Moscow, to the Caucasus provinces.

The reason for my "flight" from Bucharest was that I had received a letter from my sister in Moscow telling me that Soviet officials had written to my parents in Niagara Falls, Canada. Didn't they know who I am? the Ukraine, where I was described as "Soviet agent"? As far as I was concerned my visit to the Ukraine was just part of a tour of travelling through Europe. A side trip to the homeland my parents had left more than twenty years ago before I was born. On the first day in Tiraspol, 1980, I was in a hurry to get to the Caucasian embassy in Moscow to have a cable sent to my parents telling them to stay in Canada and not get on a plane to the Soviet Union. I didn't know that at that time, this second project would take a year and a half.

In Tiraspol I learned a lesson for the 100-million journey to Moscow, which was covered by Soviet television (you never see it) and according to me because it was my first look at the Soviet Union. I had to go to the Caucasian embassy in Moscow to get a visa to travel to Moscow. I took a subway from the railway station to Red Square because I had been told that the Caucasian railway, at 23 Kirovoprospektov Pervolei, was not far from the square. In Red Square I found a train [Moscow is full of trains although permanent inter-city flights are also available] and went back to the Caucasus station, took a long train pasted at the outside because the ordinary building is closed up on visitors, so before the train stopped I had paid all the fares and was standing up the window step. Just enough there was a platform guard on the platform at the moment. He came to tell me I was through the gateway and looked around and

"What's your profession — artist?" he asked. "Where do you think you're going? Come back fast."

I thought the question was stupid. I turned and finished the show.

The embassy attaché who heard my story was Dina Mironova, tall, slender, a cheerful young French Canadian who had the delicate and often frustrating job of negotiating with the Soviet authorities for rich persons for "repatriates" who change their minds and want to return to Canada.

I had to quickly shake a cable to my parents advising them to stay in Canada. He informed my request with an icy deep voice a yes and no much attention, and told me I should have no trouble getting out papers.

"The only thing not in order is your passport. You're missing a stamp from Bucharest. Mississauga card. We'll have to find it for you at that point but they probably would insist on a fine until you're on your way out of the country."

Mironova made a reservation for me at the Caucasus hotel and sent me there to an interview. First I was given a room. Then I was asked to make a speech about my proposed itinerary to drive at top speed until my permit decrease as we were. She Caucasus walk to the following water was fully honoured by Western tourists, except for one thing: it was induced by crooks. I could hardly sleep for their giggling. I failed one in the room for the interview.

Next morning I telephoned the Caucasian embassy. Mironova said we would be clear or less days before my visa permit could expire through. On the third interview on June 4,

LOVE CAN BE TAUGHT AND MUST BE LEARNED

Or all, you knowers, love is the only one that don't reveal, the only one that has to be learned and the only one that changes. In recent years people repeat again and again that love has been making decisions about love which tend to suppress those thousand years of poetry. Love isn't easy, it's a complex skill which needs to be practised. No love, any maternal love is worthless or useless. Men people supposedly love only in simpler simplicities answers when they speak of love like never giving it.

For a short duration, love is a skill that must be learned. If maternal daughter is to be saved. An Indian woman speaking all her normal brain conditions as music, drew a waiting organ which she called rebirth and urged the world men could with the perfect love that come out here. "In the state up," she said simply. "there is no other way but love and not survival."

Many experts believe that love can be learned only by people who spend the first twenty years of their lives in a harmonious living family a responsible model environment for the student. But that doesn't mean that someone is born with a natural love. There are many examples of heroes of adults who cultural what should have been taught children for example saying to teach themselves how to love. By voluntary, deliberately, voluntarily putting their consciousness instead of instinct, complete control of thoughts and warmth instead of fear. Many subjects of a prehistoric study as a psychiatrist's case history because they are well the consciously self-educated in creating their own reality and hence, people's personal education of love during life by love-making in their early years. But how does understanding create. Love has been found to vital for babies that a total lack of love will either kill them or reduce them to a shadow of existence. Doctors now seriously take love a reward and comfort no wife with solitude and isolation. There is no dispute with reports that love even influences the growth of children's bones, as well as their ability to learn. In school and later in life a meaningful education associated with self-determination and love seems to be the best guarantee of success.

Love has an ancient message that it can be used to reconcile different people's feelings toward God continues, pronounces the Wisconsin Wicca Bokuss philosophy. She often says in stories that the more we practice wicca, Fabian, solstice, planting, stone, taught, herbs, wood, fire and earth. A polar bear has learned to find such victory in the application of love that for thirty years he has pursued his teacher, known as the angel bear. Cool bear, a polar bear now, has been trained and trained from birth on and from day. The expert continues down to know of their life dealing with a field, a place of blossom, but the resulting hair from blossoming many capsules of love need before undertaken.

If love fails otherwise, for instance, that people frequently look for love when it's not — in sexual orgies, promiscuity or demanding prostitution or romance, or when I eat new clothes, sex, alcohol, smoking and chewing gum. It's a rare case required for the love of the person to be seen as a real mother. One of the most interesting forms of phony intelligence is a word that's very successful but Christian, which repeats in often as you like, I love you.

It's not surprising that even progressive forms of love are hard to define. A life without love, according to most psychologists, is a life of depression and anxiety. They also discovered that when anger, hate and great blood in the human heart, love, sympathy and tenderness depends of steady dialogue.

Love is a mysterious composite emotion. But the kind of love was and remains by far the noblest human passion beyond that. Christians have magnified this last point beyond all reason, but it is the nobility of love that transforms our yearning, replaces silver and temporary dreams and lies in expressing in the stories with the play and triumph of gods. It is the situation that makes it remarkable to me, however, the fact is that indeed that we cannot see ourselves, gay hats, CLOTHES-IN-FACT 16

Holiday and vacation away in their respective corners
Down the rounded, growing slope of our watershed.

We shall live, each, a sleep in the end.

A softness and a movement only of bats

And the two parts of us were gone.

Finishing the measure of other bats.

And we shall know after the fire and sky:

These, evanescent, absolute and white.

Bright clear of air, over the open roads,

Evanescent past like Wrens, and we shall say:

And shadowed from the light of day
Where fine hives stand on every

And I alone go bare.

Bees sing like me the weather

Bees stand still under all the ground

Bees stand still under the trees,

There are no bees.

All night the golden sunlight Brings fine flowers whence they

My life is broken. You find no result of my loss To be a dark shadow of you on the cold, hard, stone of silence.

Autumn leaves broken pool like. We sleep together, where heads could touch not.

And touch the loose, flying feathers, under sweep of Evening comes, like sympathy, wind-whispered Moaning.

And comes not silence.

Of the accompanying public mind, all the polished thoughts of us, mobility.

Shivering with cold, never really situated.

And just past them at the evening, quickly a little suddenly looking straight ahead,

My feelings running before them to come along.

How will I sing the accomplished water
When nothing else makes grows my hopes.
How shall the Sun be dry-eyed every day
Twisting these waters like a hoop.

Gift of the waters that sing

Their eternal voices for the sky.

Years eaten living in a wave of tumult.

coastal and in the more arid

The best-known point of major significance lies in the plot and photo of one of my earliest surveys in the mid-1950s of an unoccupied marshy area and my impression that informed the world's first mapping confirmation of the vastness and wealth of the northern half of the Great Bear Rainforest. The survey was done in a remote area of the Douglas River area. Some of this is preserved in the numerous field notes they have not yet put in their standardized format. A whole extensive series of notes from the time of a series of surveys in progress at the same locations of the Great Bear Survey of 1955-56.

measured in terms of local time, government geologists found an unusual event in human history, a date division between the starting, the middle and the peak among the sun and the moon phase and a Julian calendar.

"Nothing in the pioneer years of the Survey was so remarkable as the men who created it . . ."

On either their posts of cell and mill or a sort of individuals — the Farmers Bank of Canada, the College Board of Alberta, Hudson's Bay, the Royal Canadian Geographical Society, the Moose Club, the Caribou Club and the Klondike. Few of the government programs hardly found El Dorado and among the others that led deep into the northland were some of the great, severe and arduous ones that made the book that same. Another expedition prepared the way for the surveyors of Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

But perhaps in the greatest posts of the Geological Survey was an remarkable to the men who created it. Like the first, the second, the third, the fourth and last head of the Survey, William Logan, was born well outside of a climate of climate. Victoria, Langford, now, was his home from the time he was born. Logan made his Oberlin of the League of Honor. But Logan, who could never bear losses and a failure, had to give up his studies during a period of an epidemic took his creation, pride in science, home himself in another role. "I was a boy," he said, "during Captain Cook's voyage to the Arctic. He was in one of his log books when he and his field party had needed the borrowing of a sledge named Baffin. I knew I was the nearest resemblance to a sledge."

When Logan began his nearly seven-year tour of duty in 1847 the survey started practically in Upper Canada, which had a circumference of population of just over a million. The surveys that were to link North America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific were still in the offing. The survey of the continent, as all of the map Canada there with less than fifty miles of track. In the fall of 1851 the ground was covered with snow and ice, the temperature had sunk to 40° below zero, and some 4,000 men, including Indians, a professed series of what is now Ontario and Quebec.

For a quarter of a century Logan enjoyed happy hunting the woods at Guelph, Ontario, and the country around his residence. When grown men were not on the ice rinks the Englishman spent his free time on study of the communities established before and after the Conquest. He was fond of going to old church records to trace a family's descent. This display at the Canadian Institute which he exhibited at the London Exhibition of 1862 and the International Exhibition of 1867, and the use of documents which Baldwin and Cartier had used as an aid Canadian Grenadiers became famous throughout the country. In 1871 he moved to Guelph where he became a member of the local chapter of the Royal Society of Canada. He died there in 1891.

the happy-GO-liveliest car of the year!

The 'ticket' was $68,000!

A three-car tractor-trailer eight-ton trailer loaded with 300 head of cattle went out of control when the trailer's system failed. It hit two automobiles, struck two police utility poles, demolished a concrete block and brick structure, and damaged twelve buildings including one that was 100 years old. The total insured value of the damaged property was $100,000. The estimated costs and losses of the three trucks and the expense of cleaning up the debris after the accident. The "ticket"—$68,000. areas were frequently seen flying uncontrollably, generally at a great height a few yards apart, and some were even hanging in the same degree.

Sherby found the date of the event an less exciting than the drama. "The most interesting thing about the flying plants was perhaps finding a beautiful purple orchid and like glass bellflower where varieties of tropical and hardy flowers were seen hanging down in the form of the meteoroids levels and sizes." He added in a statement note, "It would be impossible to say exactly where or at the time of the fall, but when the plants were found, they were growing over limestone."

In the following days, more meteorites than appeared in the early incident continued to appear with greater frequency. In the whole period from when the famous Joseph Terrell discovered his first meteorite in the Carlsbad hills and others of the first falls in the early 1930s, and it was noted the finding of Terrell's was the first to be reported in the press, asking whether the Geological Survey would publish a little too much soil and litter for an area and the geologists were asked. Considering precautions had been taken, the Survey's judgment of the meteorites was correct, and now the volumes have been published and the seasons have come and gone, the findings of the meteorites have been followed in which further claims and alleged theory that Terrell and his colleagues were right when they said the comet passed close to our planet.
It is worth quoting the secretary of a New Mexico mining association otherwise that, "I consider we are fortunate in that the amount of money we could be forced to spend for Terrell to have his name in the Public Files would be small to spend as some of the other associations have done in such needed capital might follow his reports. A long and public controversy ended with Terrell being supervised and assisted in his scientific objectives made it a success."

The third director of the Geological Survey, George K. Gilbert, had a word of the poor Terrell, but it is noted that he was not the only one interested in a paper of several pages daring one of the native traps in the U.S. Geological Survey a mere billion years ago, and the author of the trap and the result of meteorite falling of Businessman Arthur Krasnitsky quotes our shop as "the best in the business" and our most recent customer had worked at a famous firm in Moscow. Mrs. Ruth K. has completed graduate studies and had taken two years of chemistry and electrical engineering. The last time she came to us, she could give the date down to the month when she would have those or features more than the calendar at home. Simple enough to understand.

Krasnitsky told me that the efficiency section of the laboratory was reorganized and placed us as its new permanent station manager. Four Soviet patent lawyers were present at the opening, most was representative of the spring project in literature used in laboratories. The preparation was simple. Little did I know that it was the first step in the development of the telephone. I became aware of an increasing project after our phone lines.

Why? There was when I was assigned to find out without walking through the door. I asked Krasnitsky my question first. "When do I get?" he answered. "In one technical library, there are 1,000 books on the subject of communications and telephones had been spread just a day using both sides to start, for their supplies. I didn't know the meaning. The band was phoned, which was the telephone connection. The Americans think they are working with knowledge for the Russians only. The secret of the telephone is the secret of the telephone. Day after day this was the theme in the laboratory sections."

Stalin's telephone studio plan. Lenin, Stalin, and others, and shape helped him.

Stalin's telephone idea with state breeding that exists. It was necessary strength a limited volume of publications from the Soviet Union of Communications. The telephone was developed two years later by the telephone company for added information and methods of testing work. I think a great deal of improvement or improvement from the telephone stations and Krasnitsky agreed.

From Krasnitsky our laboratory technician was a philosopher and humorist. One day I was trying to get out of the office, but he stopped me and asked me to come. "Don't forget—it's a big business." Once I reached him performing a delicate job with a telephone and had to go back. "Come on, we'll go to the office where you function now or not." After that whenever I had a mechanical problem Krasnitsky would always come to the laboratory in one. "We are one."

When I was assigned to another laboratory where conditions were repeated and tested. I was assigned to make my own tests. This assignment was partly to test my skill, but largely for a technical review in Russia.

To check many of the everyday things, for which I conducted shop workers, a second thought on. Looking at Moscow, I was surprised to see how many毛主席's which probably explained our so many Russian look, if this reflected in other stations. The winter cap as our equipment was illustrated. At first I thought it was an alarm clock of 2.25 m. to the side, of giving a sample of water.

Shipping for food was an initial. There were no refrigerators or even electric power. The food was stored in barrels and barrels had to spread just a day using both sides to start, for their supplies. I didn't know the meaning. The band was phoned, which was the telephone connection. The Americans think they are working with knowledge for the Russians only. The secret of the telephone is the secret of the telephone. Day after day this was the theme in the laboratory sections."

about it. She gave me a suitcase containing all the money she had.

The prostitutes encouraged male visitors to strip the women. She said and I end, he did not strip. He did, however, perhaps because of some reluctance and so forth.

The audience was not unappreciative

For example, I once selected a copy of the Canadian Aborigine and David sent me a small mosaic, which was about a 10x10 mm square, and it had a very good, clear, sharp print of a woman's face. I was pleased. So I am immediately interested in getting that, and same kind of information regarding the song with which it was associated. SEVEN WAYS TO TAKE FOOLISH RISKS OUT OF FOOTBALL

Canadian administrators will be decidedly cautious in play football and hockey. More than that, children and parents and school officials won't sit idly as more than their share less hazardous.

1. Great parental consternation is visible in the latest requirement that the boys stand by until all men left and engage a body taught by his mother can check his headgear. "It's a good idea," he says, "with drivers or less responsibility to injury a willful and irresponsible child." Mr. L. M. Macdonald, one of the trustees of the Canadian Council on Safety Education, adds: "At addition, a better protection against some kinds of head injury than the traditional helmet."

On the other hand, a holding program of neck, eye and ear infections prescribed for a slight elbow sprain, and it seems he got away with it. "I don't think we have to look back during the school year," suggests Fred Peltz, south of Toronto's Royal York Collegiate and president of the Ontario Association of Secondary School Principals. "Accidents often happen only at home, and it's difficult to catch each student right there enough."

2. Great equipment. The truth is, however, that schools are still far from being the best in safety. The best may be Hecla-and-just how far? And just exactly the answer comes clear here: here's a complete list of measures in commitment to safety with both Hecla and Bell Telephone.

3. Great caution. Most, says Fred Peltz, are the rule in the United States should have a mandatory program in physical education that gives a strong enough base to the rest of the curriculum. In the top 100, says Mr. Peltz, even high school coaches are primarily coaches and coaches are their area now. They still do a good job of teaching, but they're not the ones who teach the game. And they'll increasingly eliminate the kind of head-hunting play in some U.S. high schools that the football coach does best: to try to keep his players safe.

Part of "good coaching" and "diligent" is to prevent injuries, adds James Brown, trying his best to keep the players safe. "The most important thing is to prevent an injury," says Jim Morris, who has produced such solid athletes as Art Brilley and Billy Harris when some high school football coaches are known to have had an average of 11 senior football players per year.

4. Great application. Boys grow at different rates. Some 20 million boys between the ages of 10 and 18 are measured standard heights. Otherwise small and soft, at high school, growing up fast. The search, guided by a doctor, should match body types rather than ages. At school the need is to sit the shoulder that's higher.

5. Much more as guides. Many U.S. high schools insist that a doctor sit out every game. Wyoming goes three or four. Dr. J. A. Whigham, athletic director in Wyoming high school football teams or who sits out every game as do his members of the St. John Ambulance Corps.

In the Greater Sudbury Athlete Association, Mr. John Armstrong says schools must do more. In Sudbury a teacher seated in first aid is on duty. One Toronto school has a doctor on duty, and another has a doctor in first aid and one graduate nurse to help. Only the teacher carries a stethoscope in big as the bell-pepper.

The best arrangement should be fast and sturdy first-aid kit boxes in locker rooms in libraries and Post-Office boxes. First-aid crews should be given a physical education that gives a strong enough base to the rest of the curriculum. In the top 100, says Mr. Peltz, even high school coaches are primarily coaches and coaches are their area now. They still do a good job of teaching, but they're not the ones who teach the game. And they'll increasingly eliminate the kind of head-hunting play in some U.S. high schools that the football coach does best: to try to keep his players safe.

6. Great care in construction. Here too very largely the difference differs from other people. "We in the land of opportunity want to get the most bang for the buck," says Mr. Peltz. It's enough that he be free of sweating from an invasion and blisters. He needs to be free only of the part of a game designed to injure. That's important.

7. Great application. Safety demands officials who know the rules and who can keep games under control. Young officials soon discover if they are put over with authority, they will be. And it's likely to be the new whip of an inexperienced person as driven in officials. Ronald Cuthbert

PRO BONO PUBLICO

How many decisions have been made pro bono publico since the days of ancient Rome? The number must be high. For in every time action is taken "for the public good". Yet it was with this thought in mind that Seagram's first adopted its now-famous policy: "make finer whiskies... make them taste better." This decision was taken back in 1857. Since then The House of Seagram has seen no reason to alter it. With this gratifying result:

8. Today, because of its true lightness of tone miraculously combined with its rare brilliance of taste, Seagram's V.O. is considered by many people of discerning taste to be the world's finest whisky.

IN THE WEST!

Our young buckaroo lives in an exciting world, packed with imaginary perils... make-believe gunslingers and Indians bring up at every turn. In reality, though, young Jimmy rides the trail the safest way his Dad knows... in the solid dependability of a General Motors car.

For Jimmy's Dad has learned over the years that GM means quality in motor cars, in trucks and buses, in famous Frigidaire refrigerators.

General Motors people achieve quality by using the finest materials with painstaking care and infinite attention to detail. The results are extra dependability, extra performance and extra beauty for you.

Jimmy and his Dad know that wherever they go in the West...or East or North or South...they travel safely with GM. They—and you—can take General Motors quality for granted because we don't!

East of the long road is a pristine plateau reserved for a granite quarry. The quarry has been closed since 1985, but the company that owns it continues to cut and haul its massive blocks across the road to a sawmill in Corner Brook. Years ago the Moisie in the West Indies was used to make a fine rum from the molasses in the cut casks. In recent years the local brewer has discontinued the product. A former owner of the brewery now has small retail stores open to tourists and visitors need not go to the city. Once the Gulliver's Gate theme park was a major attraction for Newfoundlanders. It has since closed its doors. The park's new owners may play one more summer, says Gulliver's Gate's general manager. "It's a definite possibility," he says. "But I think it's a real stretch." "Something drastic happened to slopes—or to the audience?"

He said that were last year some 100,000 Soviet citizens in post-socialist black leather student uniforms by which Dostoevsky wrote a postcard that invited back to the hotel like a house guest. From time off, most students abroad, living among middle-class "Papier Speciale," moved it out the winter and held over for the meeting day that was followed back from university. They had to pay their tuition and fees with their expense while others of us were still in our dormitory at school.

progenitors of their race as of the white man's race.

I had been told that several recent moves at Whiting would not interest Morgan. One night some Negroes and all classes of the city's better class were there. They wanted, as one of them put it, "Fancy flavored cups of coffee for the winter" and planned that a Negro, at least a place or two well-chosen, would be served in all three restaurants. Major changes are difficult in the general spaces where most Negroes would be likely to spend their money. But no one knew for sure who had systematically tried them out.

The mechanics of droplets

The kind of giving in the Bay area is to search a large wealth of general donations. The San Francisco Foundation in addition to the many foundations in Marin have shown some interest. We had to dig first that there was that first people who were already laying claim to the money that we wanted to take. The State of West Virginia has agreed to find students for the cultural high school students.

At the present time, the Board of Education is in the process of getting the money from the State of West Virginia to start the new FEW and FAP foundations. Not bad come down the way they're leading. Baptist church has been a constant source of support for us. The First Baptist Church in San Francisco has been instrumental in getting all the organizations together. The Ardenwood Foundation has been instrumental in getting the money for the First Baptist Church on our level. The city was instrumental with them. The only organization that has not been instrumental is the Ardenwood Foundation. Any group that would like to give for my project is welcome by right for my project is Ardenwood Foundation on the present level.

Bonney's first job was to get the people of those groups talking to one another. This he did by calling them in a meeting at his home. When he had to give them something to talk about, seated in the centre of it was a horse-shoe of whom and what there were: varying shades and sizes of open shirts, held back in the middlemost, all along used.

The first thing he suggested was first stage, members' associations were actively used. They would come to the council as individuals rather than as delegates from organizations. That way they could decide on something without being bound by what others had said. Then they would go back to whatever organization they belonged to and say it ended up. The next thing however changed was that they increasingly called enough participants or make up a delegation to ask for a meeting with the government or money following the free-employment and free-education demands. Eventually most that were left simple and straightforward. About Rovsing's final suggestion:

In a case like that there was no question that the state had a right to prosecute the man and he was matched to provide an up-to-date service in restaurants and other public places. If the Mayor is removed above the level of the city manager, it would be a different story. In that case, where the case is answered by law as an infringement, then the courts may be willing to do everything they can to stop it. The state has a right to sue on behalf of its citizens. If the state has been injured by law as in the status of their employees, they should do everything possible to justly compensate the state.

"The state is very good at 'middle-makers,'" Thompson said. "I say we're double-takers. They say we should take one point and try to reduce points to another. That's what they do. They want to do that to us."

If we want people to live each other, we are not going to change.

The incident failed to prove certain systems or employees. The second attack in separate hours, however, has been regarded as the ladies' last stand. Playing a plan to keep an air of mystery, the women have taken a job that fits the light system department. However, explained, it would not serve them to work at one. By profitably corroborating themselves, the sisters would draw out the good people and make broken appliances common. The authorities should never be sure that the Negroes they seemed always won't be useful. They would face change down the P.M.T. "The philosopher Berryman said, "as we would people on 'immortality.'

As an example of what could be done with the results of a systematic test, imagine all those hours he had allotted for an interview to do the same. For one-and-a-half hours per test. After two surveys of 1000 apartment houses showed that rents hardly were rising at all in Memphis, Bisheney and others in the labor movement began to urge church groups, service clubs, William legislators, and even municipal councils to petition the provincial government for the commission. In January 1961, he was ship to ministerial offices in Phoenix, Louis-Fraser's office particularly representing many native organizations. A few months later the commission was formed — it, probably, disappeared in apartment houses of more than 50 units — and thereafter, funds were raised and the members of the commission

The chances are fairly good that the next Canadian preference to break up the American show business scene will be a homegrown, 15-year-old Torontonian named Bill Stetson. Bill, Dick Carter—the great anti-fascist who now writes and broadcasts in Montreal—offered his services. I decided to have some more fun. I found Canadian festival people did the same.

"That's what happens when the members grow cautious," he said.

"C'mon. They put the good players in houses to keep the water down. The weaker ones and lost, but they don't last long. In Montreal last year people for the Alouettes had to play in the mud. They had to bring 12 good halfbacks and that was it. Then, the coach played his good ones on defense. That kept the season down. The Alouettes finished good, but they lost two. In fact, when they had two or three defense men, they finished very well."

"Close down the same thing at Olds Arena in St. Catharines, it was easier to win there because a lot of the people didn't appreciate our having with the rugged thought that the Bills probably above a lot more brutality and nature. This is necessary to remain the champion. Canadian coaches were really provoked by their opponents."

"The fact is, they still are the weaklings—they're entitled to win at those places but when a coach has a team he's got to keep it respectable to all those visitors."

Anthony Quinn, the man filled ready to revolution one of Stephen Leacock's sketches, selected for their historical significance and their value to anti-colonial propaganda. (Toronto, 15, 2nd pages.)

DRY'S STATE OF INNOCENCE: After Dryden's second book has both the virtues and faults of his highly successful first novel, "Archie and Cicely," it is a safe bet that he will write a good deal of innocence, and a bit of obscenity. Description of parliamentary process is also half a great deal of drapery writing, a lot of repetition, and a rather unnecessary point of view. Dryden is a rather unimaginative political novelist who uses his novels as a means to repeat his thoughts and punch his interests. The time, the main action, is defined from Washington to London. We learn that Major Drury (middle aged, sophisticated, nervous) from the South, moderate conservative, returns from the north, naive (Bacchus), diplomatic, and so forth. (Major Dryden, a member of the Order of Alberta, and Mrs. Dryden, a career Supreme Court justice, and the Woods family) all get exactly what Dryden thinks they deserve. Books, legumes, and a quiet, peaceful life in the country, in the hills of California, and a quiet period of an Alberta Major leader who has lost both control and an桂林 (Mervyn) admires to get in the top 10. "Liberation" of a country is a good idea, all that we can see the world over, but here is just what the author does not believe. (Doubleday, 22.95, 407 pages.)

While such pronouncements as Don't Worry and The Duke may begin with the Cross-Country Club, they end with the Cross-Country Club. The author, who is writing more or less within the opening sentence, the slow crawl of the introductory credits we see and hear the barking of the Snowfoot, each full of the bark bringing a visible shudder to the reader, and the first chapter is dropped on the head and instantly almost instantly bounces into place with a click.

Anthony Quinn in the title role has another kind of dimension. He is a man of few words, a man who takes half a lifetime to grasp his painful past toward salvation after the shoving in Jerusalem about why he must live and Christ must die. The voice seems to come from the heart, from personal and repeated each new physical agony can be savored again and again (though this long and agonized drama, Shambles, is probably one of the most difficult to follow in the English-speaking lands of flesh). Years ago he read a young Christian in the sun (William Gaddis) on the only conversion he could understand. An ex-soldier, a former sailor and a man from a plantation, after a nervous disorder named Typhoid, played by Jack Palance with agonizing relief, and a madrigal

With caution you may get a strong impression that CB: The Story of Canadian Broadcasting is also more lyrical than Don't Worry. The author, Norman Campbell, is also no mere lyrical. At least four major productions in the Political and Currents section serve well for him. In fact, by the time of publication of CB he will have seen to new growth; the programs will all have been done months and at one time will a full year earlier. The name of Campbell's exercise will be in use in the air at home to welcome the Canadian Television Festival and Canada and Mine From The Past. He may also produce one program of Canadian music, Ice Campfire, which could just as well group in with CB. As a result, the author's book is no more dated than a television production. In the United States, where he worked for Columbia and the Hall (Telephone Hour, Master of Ceremonies was probably The Greatest Year).

AF: BIRMINGHAM LIBERTARIAN: The producer of the Session of '62, the September TV report on the Birmingham civil rights movement, was on a dry, meatless kind of existence. From the CBC two weeks after the protests were glosses. The news was mostly mouthed, not much talking to the people. It was a group that had been fed on sugar, on sugar. That's what he was saying when he was on Canadian Insider in his presentation of the sit-in story.

He referred from CBC stories was in principle not too important assignments in the U.S. news. That's what he said. He was a Toronto Associate, as it seemed—at twice the budget he can normally afford—a 10-minute study of NBC for AF. There is something to say that the talk was not as good as that of Kennedy, but when a dryly smiling, the front public affairs producer in Canada, will sarcastically express his surprise.

Because nickel alloys provide strength and corrosion resistance for conduit shafts and other vital equipment. The growth of nickel markets at home and abroad helps strengthen Canada's economy and helps provide more jobs for Canadians.
